Sharing & Swap Shed

Next year we are looking to set up a small shed for reading books that will be on the playground.

The idea is that you can borrow books and then return them once done.

In the meantime, we are looking for any donations of books in a reusable condition and before we buy a shed, if anyone has one similar to the photo that is no longer needed, we will be happy to repurpose it.

See the main office for more details.

Year 4 have made these fantastic group collages of extreme earth.

A Picnic with Mrs Ebanks

Mrs Ebanks and her group have been having a picnic today, but first they needed to get some food and prepare.

They decided to take the bus up to Tesco and buy the food themselves. They used plenty of the skills they've been learning, such as creating a shopping list, choosing the right food, finding Tesco on the map, thinking about money and cost and their wonderful cookery skills in preparing the food back at school.

Eco News – Gardeners World Live visit

On Friday 14th June our Gardening Club had the opportunity to visit gardeners World Live at the NEC. We went because the Gardening Club have been working on a wheelbarrow entry for a competition.

Our wheelbarrow was based on the theme 'grow your own' so the children planted an allotment in a wheelbarrow and are currently growing potatoes, onions, sprouts, carrots, beans and peas. They even made a scarecrow.

We saw our entry as well as lots of others and had a great day. It was nice to talk to children from other schools about their wheelbarrow entries as well.

Woodhouse Primary @Woodho... · 6d :

Our gardening club have created this wonderful "Grow your own roast dinner" planted wheelbarrow for the @GWandShows at the NEC today. The children have spent the day there taking in the sights and sounds of all the contributions. Green fingered at @greenheartLP! @rootstofruit202

SCAN TO BOOK

Here are six helpful tips from Coram Beanstalk to help you have fun with reading this summer!

Find the right time and place to read...

1

Sign up for the Reading Agency's Summer Reading Challenge at your local library, or join online:
<https://summerreadingchallenge.org.uk/>

2

Read outside! Head to your local green space with a blanket and set up a relaxing reading den. If it's raining, make a comfy space inside instead.

1

Create a comfortable space to read...

3

Read a recipe and make something delicious. Take it in turns with someone else to read each step of the recipe out loud.

4

Turn your favourite book into a piece of art. Use any art materials you like to create a scene or illustration from the book.

5

Take books with you out on trips. Whether you're visiting a relative or off to the seaside, take something to read in your bag to keep you entertained at all times.

6

Play games with the books you are reading. Play 'I spy' using the pictures, or 'Who am I?' by guessing from the characters in a story.

2

Take your time...

Share books at different times of day. Don't give children time limits for reading. Make time for bedtime stories so you can relax too!

3

Have books all around the house...

Make books available in different rooms. Provide a range of books alongside other toys. Match the type of book to the time you're sharing it.

Choose Reading #2

Share different types of books...

As children learn to read, they are also beginning to develop their likes and dislikes when it comes to books. Very often for children who are reluctant to read, it might be that they have not yet found the right kind of book for them. If you can find the type of book that helps spark their curiosity and discover the joy in reading, you will be one step closer to supporting them to become lifelong readers.

1

It's important that children have someone to support them in finding out who they are as a reader, and they will need to be exposed to a wide range of books and texts to discover this for themselves. Luckily, there has never been a better time for the variety and range of engaging children's books being published to suit every child's need. Spend time talking to your child about the kind of books or magazines they could be reading.

2

We often think that children should only be reading traditional chapter books (sometimes the thicker the better) and we tend to focus on fiction, but there is so much more out there. It can also be easy to let our own childhood taste in books affect how we talk to children about what they like. Remember that the world is rapidly changing and so is the world of children's books. Graphic novels, non-fiction texts, diaries, magazine subscriptions, puzzle books, interactive books, joke books and poetry can open up many more opportunities for enjoying reading together and there is a lot out there to be explored.

3

If your child is learning to read using phonics reading scheme books, this doesn't mean that you can't share other material with them. Often children can be put off by a book which they have no interest in. Don't feel you have to buy lots of expensive books either. Sign up for free at your local library so children can choose new books regularly, swap books with friends or have a look for some bargains in charity shops.

Choose Reading #2

Share different types of books...

1

Make sure your child has access to a range of different books...

Try different types of books with your child. Explore graphic novels, non-fiction books, magazines, as well as fiction.

Help your child discover their own tastes...

Talk to your child about their likes and dislikes. Offer help and support with recommending books. Don't try and influence your child to like a certain type of book.

3

Be creative with finding new books...

Head to your local library and sign up for free. Let your child choose a range of books. Swap books with friends and look in charity shops.

Choose Reading #3

Read aloud...

It is a common misconception that when children reach a certain age, or can read fluently by themselves, we should encourage them to only read independently. Although developing the skill to read independently is important, this doesn't mean that we should stop reading aloud to children too! In fact, continuing to do this really helps children become better readers by hearing a good model of reading from an adult.

1 Listening to you reading aloud, your child is free to imagine the story for themselves and visualise what is happening, rather than having to worry about reading the words themselves. If you find that your child is reluctant to let you read aloud to them, don't give up. Keep suggesting it and hopefully you'll catch them at the right time. It's also fine if they aren't 100% focussed while you're reading.

2 If they want to sit close to you and look at the pictures and words that's great, but if they would rather be doing something else while you're reading, like drawing or playing, this doesn't mean they're not actually listening and engaged. Try and tempt them with a new book or ask them if they'd like to choose a book for you to look at together. Make the book sound exciting and get their attention by pointing out something about the front cover. For example, "Oh wow! Let's have a look at these pictures together!", "Shall we find out some facts in this book?", or "Look at this monster! Shall we find out what's inside?"

3 Apart from all the ways that reading aloud can help develop your child's reading skills, it can also have a profound effect on their wellbeing. Even if it's only for 10-15 minutes a day, during this bonding time you share an emotional connection with your child, free from any other distractions where you can both focus fully on the book you're sharing together.

Choose Reading #3

Read Aloud...

1 Keep reading aloud to your child...
Reading aloud has great benefits for children of all ages and adults too. Let your child relax and imagine the story. Show your child a good model of reading aloud.

2 Try reading aloud at different times...
If your child doesn't want to listen, keep trying at different times of day. Don't worry if your child likes to draw or do something else while you're reading to them.

3 Introduce books in an exciting way...
Encourage your child to choose the book. Point out something interesting on the front cover. Ask them a question about the book to draw them in.

Choose Reading # 4

Chat about the books you are sharing...

Talking about the books you share with your child is equally as important as reading aloud and listening to them read to you. Chatting with your child can tell you a great deal about how much your child is enjoying the book, how much of the text they are accessing and what they really think.

1 When you talk about the characters, settings, pictures, facts, or anything else you might find in the book, you are actively involving your child in the act of reading and helping them to become more engaged. Through these informal conversations, they can tell you what they think, ask you questions, and you can focus on what they are most interested in. Most importantly, it builds and strengthens the connection between you, your child and the book you are sharing.

2 Be careful to not put any pressure on these conversations and avoid too many questions which only check their understanding. This can feel like a test and can put children off if they feel they don't know the correct answer. Instead, think of ways to connect your child to what's happening in the book and spend lots of time talking about the book before reading it. By talking about the characters, settings or topics they might find out about before they start the book, you are giving them extra confidence and setting them up to succeed. Ask them lots of open-ended questions and share what you feel or think about the book too.

3 Use the pictures to play games, asking them to spot certain things on different pages or point out things they like. While talking about what's happening in the book, use this as an opportunity to explain some of the trickier words or concepts to them and try dropping in some higher-level vocabulary to extend their understanding. Always be guided by your child and don't worry if you feel the conversation has moved away from the book. You can take your time and find a way of bringing your child back to the book.

Choose Reading # 4

Chat about the books you are sharing...

1 Let your child guide the conversation... Focus on what your child is most interested in talking about. Use the conversation to build a connection between you, your child and the book.

2 Ask open-ended questions and value your child's opinion... Avoid using too many questions which check their understanding of the book. Help your child connect their life to the book.

3 Have fun and extend their vocabulary... Play games using the pictures and words. Use this time to explain trickier words. Don't worry if the chat moves away from the book.

Look for words all around you...

Remember that reading doesn't have to be limited to sharing books with your child. Although we know this is a brilliant way to show children the pleasure you can find in reading, there are lots of other ways to incorporate reading into your daily routine.

1

Think about all the things you need to read to find things out. Why not ask your child to help you read a message on your phone? Or see if they can read signs in the street while you're out for a walk. Make this into a game of 'I Spy' and see if they can spot any common words. What are the names of the shops you go into? Ask them to look at food items in the supermarket and help you read the ingredients. Later, find a recipe in a book or online that they could help read with you while cooking a meal.

2

If your child is into sport, you could look up results together and talk about them. You could even look at the daily news. Use a child-friendly website like BBC's Newsround and find out together what the top news stories are that day. Again, be guided by your child's interest and find something which appeals to them.

3

The more you get children to start connecting the words they see around with the sound of the word, the more interest they will have in being able to read it for themselves. If children see that reading can be something that helps you to learn how to do more things or find out more interesting stuff, they are more likely to start seeing the benefits of putting in the work required.

Look for words all around you...

1

Incorporate reading into your daily routine...

Ask children to spot words on road signs and tell you what they say. Play 'I Spy' seeing if they can spot names of roads or shops while out on a walk.

2

Encourage your child to notice that reading is all around us...

Ask your child to help you read out food ingredients in the supermarket. Encourage your child to help you read any important notices out and about.

3

Seek opportunities where reading helps your child to do something...

Encourage your child to read age-appropriate news sources with you to find out what the top stories are. Ask your child to help you read a recipe while making a meal.

Choose Reading # 6

Communicate with your child's school...

It's important to keep up all the positive reading habits you have been building with your child, even if they become reluctant at times. You can share any phonics or reading scheme books your child brings home from school in a fun way while supporting them with learning to read.

1

Make sure that your child is still encouraged to choose books they want to read alongside school requirements. Remember you are not expecting your child to be able to decode every book they choose and you can get a great deal out of any book by reading to them, sharing the reading and talking about the pictures.

Children are supported best when all the adults around them are working together towards the same goal. Make sure that you have a good line of communication with your child's teacher around their reading. It's likely that they will see a different attitude or approach to reading from your child compared to what you see at home, so be open and honest about what you notice. When possible, attend any reading activities or workshops your child's school offers to parents. By doing this, you will be able to learn more about how your child is learning to read in school and how to better support them at home.

3

Remember that you play a values and crucial part in helping your child to become a reader. Model good reading habits to your child and show them the value in learning to read. The most important thing you can do is to help your child feel supported, relaxed and happy and ultimately encourage them to choose reading.

Choose Reading # 6

Communicate with your child's school...

1

Enjoy a range of books alongside school requirements...

Support your child with any books they have been given to read from school. Keep encouraging your child to choose books they want to read.

Take an interest in your child's reading at school...

Talk to your child's teacher about how they are getting on with reading. Be honest and open about how things are going. Attend any reading activities or workshops.

3

Try to keep things positive...

Focus on helping your child feel supported, relaxed and happy about reading. Model reading habits to your child and show them the value of reading. Encourage them to choose reading for themselves.

Birmingham Community Libraries are currently in a transitional period as we consult on the new libraries model amalgamating with the Neighbourhood Advice service.

Due to the consultation timeline and the requirement to make in year savings, as staff leave the service, they are unable to be replaced.

Due to the reduced number of community library staff available we are introducing a temporary timetable for the majority of libraries which will close for one additional day per week.

If you are interested in a life-changing vocation and can provide a safe, loving home to a child in care, we'd love to hear from you.

Autism and Me for diagnosed autistic children 8 - 12 years

Supported by SOLAR

- Is your child autistic?
- Are they aged 8-12 years?
- Would you like them to learn more about what it is to be autistic in a neuro-affirming way?

Then enquire about our Autism and Me program.

Autism and Me is a 3-morning, face to face group program for autistic children aged between 8 and 12 years.

It offers the opportunity to explore what it is to be autistic in a small, supportive group setting.

It provides the opportunities to discuss individual experiences and hear about the experiences of others and offers supportive strategies that can help in day-to-day life.
